Collection Description

Historical and Biographical Information

Troy Jackson was born and raised in Allagash, Maine. Before becoming involved in politics, he worked as an equipment operator in the logging industry. He was elected to the Maine Senate in 2008 and then elected Senate president in 2018. He has represented Maine Senate District 1, which includes Aroostook County from Caribou northward.

The first Maine Acadian Day took place on June 28, 1978. James B. Longley was governor during this time (1975-1979). The Madawaska town officials and Maine State Legislature designated the day as Acadian Day in Maine. In 1979, the event grew from a single day to a week-long celebration; in 1980 the first family reunion was held during the Acadian festival and every subsequent year a family was chosen to be honored and would host a reunion during this week.¹ Each year, the chosen family would have their genealogy researched, which was compiled into a book (or books).

In 2011, the Madawaska Acadian Festival moved to August to incorporate World Acadian Day, which is celebrated every year on August 15. This was done to include Madawaska's neighbors and family members living in Canada.

A new resolution recognizing June 28 as Maine Acadian Day was read and adopted on May 10, 2024 by both the Maine Senate and the Maine House of Representatives. A planning committee consisting of members of the Madawaska Historical Society, the Grand Isle Historical Society, and the Maine Acadian Heritage Council (MAHC) organized a celebration held on Sunday, June 30. Patrick Lacroix, director of the Acadian Archives, served as master of ceremonies in lieu of Lise Pelletier, president of the MAHC, who was unable to attend. The event consisted of Mass at St. David's church, a traditional meal served in the church basement, a recreation of the 1785 Acadian landing, a smudging ceremony led by Shawn Francis (Madawaska Maliseet
