Collection Description

Historical and Biographical Information

The Mi'kmaq, Maliseet, and Passamaquoddy are three of the five federally recognized indegionous tribes in Maine. The Maliseet also have ancestral lands in Canada along with other Indigenous groups. Though the Wesget-Sipu are not a federally recognized tribe, they did apply for this recognition in the late 2000s and have been active in this region of Maine in the past. Members from each group donated materials to this collection as did other organizations.

The Acadian Archives is a part of the University of Maine at Fort Kent and was established in the 1990s to preserve the history of the Acadians and the Saint John Valley Region. It strives to provide a variety of services to the community including exhibits such as this one.

Scope and Content

This collection is made up of materials owned by the Acadian Archives from their Native American exhibit- First People: Mi'kmaq, Maliseet, Passamaquoddy. Because most of the materials from this collection were loaned to the Archive, this collection mainly consists of labels/signage, images, and summaries/historical overviews of objects. Paperwork including lists of loaned materials and the institutions/people that loaned said objects are kept by the Archives' staff. The only actual artifacts in this collection are two flags from the Premiere Nation Malecite, who are located in Quebec, Canada.

Arrangement

This collection has been divided into six series: Laminated information cards; Unlaminated information sheets; Labels for individual exhibit items (including who it was loaned by); Exhibit summaries and supplemental materials; Flags; and Oversize materials. The last series consists of three subseries: McCord Museum pictures; Exhibit signs; and Informational Posters.

The processing archivist tried to keep the original order of the materials. Some items were rearranged to group tags donated by the same person/organization or collection together. The archivist also created the series based on the materials available and what categories they fell into.

Separated Materials (If Applicable)

Many materials were loaned to the Acadian Archives for the length of time this exhibit was on display and were returned after it ended. There is paperwork and images documenting the items used for them, but this collection only consists of a small percentage of materials that the archives owns.
