Collection Description

Historical and Biographical Information

These panoramic photographs are blown-up copies of 6 postcards that Alain and Louise originally found at an antique store in Freeport, Maine. Their original creator and provenance before this is unknown.

Alain and Louise had a friend from the Valley take blown-up photographs to be able to hang in their home. The original postcards were lost during this process, but the Ouellettes kept the photographs' negatives and donated them alongside the photographs.

Scope and Content

Panoramic view depicting the town of Fort Kent in circa the early 20th century. These images depict early structures such as the Fort Kent Blockhouse, the footbridge across the river dividing the town from their Canadian neighbor, surrounding fields and woods.

Arrangement

The photographs are arranged in an order that shows a panoramic view of Fort Kent from across the river in Clair, New Brunswick.
