Collection Description

Historical and Biographical Information

Florence Louise Savage attended the Madawaska Training School (MTS) and later taught at a local school in Castine. Her daughter, Janice didn't know exactly when her mother attended the MTS, but going off of the dates from the scrapbook would have attended in the 1910s-early 1920s and started teaching in the 1920s.

Janice also noted that her father and family grew up on Main Street in Fort Kent in a brick house. They farmed cattle near the railroad and later sold their land to the railroad company. To her knowledge, her uncle and some cousins still reside in town and Eagle Lake, Maine. (As of the time this finding aid was written.)

The Madawaska Training School was chartered in 1878. Initially the school was divided between locations in Fort Kent and Van Buren, Maine; in 1884, the Van Buren location was moved to Grand Isle. Fort Kent became the sole home of the school in 1887. A number of buildings were added to the Madawaska Training School campus throughout the years, including Nowland Hall, a dormitory opened in 1893; a building of classrooms dedicated as Cyr Hall in 1895; the model school in 1909; Dickey Hall, a men's dormitory in 1816; and a gymnasium in 1929. In 1920, a high school component was added to the training school, awarding high school diplomas to its graduates. By 1952 funding waned for the school and its structure fell into disrepair. This, combined with the lack of enthusiasm and support for a 2-year program when the state held a number of teachers' colleges, led to the Madawaska Training School remaining the only normal school in the state of Maine in 1952. After a legislative mandate, the high school component began a three-year phase out, beginning in 1949. The legislature pushed for the school to be closed; however, after intense lobbying by the school's administration, the Madawaska Training School was restructured and renamed the Fort Kent Normal School in 1955. It would see two more name changes (Fort Kent State Teacher's College in 1961 and Fort Kent Kent State College in 1966) before becoming the University of Maine at Fort Kent in 1970.

Scope and Content

Most of the pictures in the photo album pertained to Florence's time in Castine. Her daughter tried to remove those [not related to these times?], but may not have removed them all.

Arrangement

This collection is divided into three series: series I: photographs, series II: school letters, and series: III English book.

Though the original scrapbook album was discarded due to mold, the original order of the photographs were kept when put in archival sleeves. This order corresponds to the photograph numbers in the collection inventory below. All notes/descriptions from the pages were copied into the finding aid in parentheses. Additional descriptions by the archivist follow without parentheses; in some cases there were no descriptions in the scrapbook of the images. The original scrapbook didn't have numbered pages, but when taking the photographs out of the scrapbook, the processing archivist numbered the pages so that users could see which images were on what page. There were also 26 blank pages at the end of the original album.

Separated Materials (If Applicable)

Florence's daughter tried to remove those photographs not related to [her mom's time at MTS and Castine] prior to sending them to the Archives, but may not have removed them all. The original scrapbook was discarded due to mold concerns- see conservation notes section above. The scrapbook had a dark green cover and black inside covers with black construction paper pages for the images to be pasted to and was bound at the spine by string bound through two holes in the middle.

The English book's covers were also discarded due to being covered in mold. The processing archivist assessed the pages and finding them free of mold, kept them in folders. The book was bound in a red cover that was bound by two metal rings.

A father's day card from the donor (creator's daughter) was tucked into one of the blank pages at the back of the scrapbook. Due to being covered in red rot, this card was discarded, but the letter inside it was kept as it's in better condition.
